

Heath plant to get new production line

HEATH — Samuel Manu-Tech announced Friday its Heath plant will receive a new production line after the closing of one of the company's Canadian plants.

In February, company officials announced the new Heath plant at 1455 James Parkway would bring 100 new jobs to the area.

The transfer of the production line is expected to create higher productivity and improve profitability, according to a company news release.

Samuel Manu-Tech plans to release more information about the production line's impact on the Heath plant in the future, according to the news release.
